202										very excellent person: dull, mild, solid and plodding; and in his person large and heavy. It is
203										only a subsequent age that has discovered his having possessed a degree of sagacity, for
204										which he did not get credit while he lived. So far back as 1765 he published an attack on
205										our system of entails; in 1779 he explained a scheme for a uniform standard of weighs
206										and measures;and in 1789 he put forth considerations in favour of dividing the Court of
207										Sessions into more courts than one, and of introducing juries for the trial of civil causes. All
208										these improvements have since taken place, but they were mere visions in his time: and
209										his anticipation of them, in which so far as I ever heard, he had no associate, is very
210										honourable to his thoughtfulness and judgement. Not withstanding the utter dissimilarity of the 211										two men, there was a great friendship between John and Henry Erskine, which it is to the
212										honour of Swinton's ponderous placidity that Erskine's endless jokes upon him never disturbed (n).

John wrote his will by way of a letter to Isobell Stenhouse, probably the daughter of Andrew Stenhouse of Burnet Island Scotland. He was about to depart for Rotterdam, Holland, and then to the coast of Africa on the ship "Nanny", James Somerville, comander. He explained that he had left his chest & clothes with his landlord, John Dunlop near Union Stairs, Wapping. He explained in detail what clothes he was taking with him. He also said that he had left with Capt. John Webster the sum of £70. He ended by informing Isobell that she was his "heir and whole executrix". This letter was addressed to Andrew Stenhouse of Burnt Island, Fifesh., Scot. (a)
